Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review (UPR), established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its fifteenth session from 21 January to 1 February 2013. The review of Liechtenstein was held at the 15th meeting on 30 January 2013. The delegation of Liechtenstein was headed by Ms. Aurelia Frick, Minister of Foreign Affairs. At its 17th meeting held on 1 February 2013, the Working Group adopted the report on Liechtenstein.
2. On 14 January 2013, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Liechtenstein: Argentina, Côte d'Ivoire, and Malaysia.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Liechtenstein:
 - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/15/LIE/1);
 - (b) A compilation prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/15/LIE/2);
 - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/15/LIE/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Iceland, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Liechtenstein through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the UPR.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Liechtenstein stated that the commitment to the protection and promotion of human rights has for many years been a priority of Liechtenstein's foreign policy and its involvement at the United Nations. The last five years have shown that the UPR can provide real added value to the UN human rights system and is a valuable complement to the treaty body system. The UPR has established itself as a key instrument for monitoring the global human rights situation. At the same time, it is as an expression of universal commitment to the protection of human rights. Liechtenstein would like to call upon all member states to engage constructively with the UPR process.
6. In the last approximately four years since Liechtenstein's first UPR, improvements have been made in all areas of its governmental and administrative activities. The accepted UPR recommendations have either already been integrated into on-going reform processes and existing measures or separate processes have been launched for that purpose.
7. As a direct measure after its first UPR, Liechtenstein intensified exchanges with civil society. Liechtenstein had received the recommendation to include all stakeholders in the follow-up to the UPR, and consequently, the Office for Foreign Affairs has organized discussion events for Liechtenstein human rights NGOs in each of the last four years. The NGOs also had the opportunity to comment on the draft national report for Liechtenstein's second UPR.

8. Liechtenstein has also improved its data situation relating to the protection of human rights and non-discrimination and since 2010, the Government has issued an annual report on the situation of human rights in Liechtenstein.

9. The Minister emphasized that many of the developments of the past years can be understood only with reference to Liechtenstein's integration in Europe: Liechtenstein is a small State that simultaneously belongs to two economic areas: the Customs and Currency Area of Switzerland; and the European Economic Area (EEA). With Liechtenstein's accession to the Schengen/Dublin area on 19 December 2011, a further integration step in Europe was taken. For about a year now, this means that Liechtenstein belongs to the European area of freedom, security and justice.

10. Consequently, Liechtenstein reviewed various national legislations and adjusted them to the European level. The Schengen/Dublin agreements offer individuals an extensive and unmatched degree of self-realization. This is true both for Liechtenstein citizens and for foreign citizens residing in Liechtenstein and entails a more objective and improved human rights situation, be it in regard to asylum or migration in general. The new Asylum Act entered into force on 1 June 2012. One major improvement is the inclusion of the explicit possibility of settling refugees recognized by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Liechtenstein.

11. About one third of Liechtenstein's resident population is composed of foreign citizens. Because of the many commuters from abroad, their share in the workplace is even two thirds. The best possible promotion of the integration of the foreign population, the promotion of mutual understanding, and the fight against racism and xenophobia therefore have a very high priority for the Government. With regard to the fight against racism and xenophobia, Liechtenstein has in recent years emphasized efforts against right-wing extremism. For the years 2010 to 2015, the Government adopted a plan of measures for this purpose.

12. As for strengthening of the rights of accused persons and suspects in the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Minister informed that the revision of the Code of Criminal Procedure in 2011 provides new rules, especially governing the right of access to documents, the right to translation assistance, the right to request measures of enquiry, the right to free choice of counsel with the ability to contact a lawyer already during police investigations, among others. These improvements complement the strengthening of victims' rights in recent years.

13. Regarding the equality of women and men, women enjoy equal rights under the law, nevertheless, women are still underrepresented in many areas. The challenge is to make de facto equality possible. An important area in this regard is equal opportunity in the labour market and a balanced representation of women and men in political bodies. Measures have also been taken against domestic violence, and the category of criminal offences that must be prosecuted ex officio has been expanded. The prevention of human trafficking has also been strengthened with a new prevention programme.

14. In the area of children and young people, the entry into force of the completely revised Children and Youth Act at the beginning of 2009 was a milestone. The new law creates two new independent institutions: the Children and Youth Advisory Council and the Ombuds Office for Children and Young People. Important improvements over the last four years were also achieved by expanding the protection of children from sexual abuse and other forms of sexual violence through a revision of the sexual criminal law in 2010, which was an important step for the domestic implementation of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. The Liechtenstein Parliament approved ratification of this instrument last December, and the instrument of ratification will be deposited in New York this very afternoon.

15. The Government is also planning a reform of family law. The focus of the reform is on the new rules governing custody of children of separated and divorced parents. Other elements of the planned reform include the elimination of the discriminatory term "illegitimate", as well as a reform of the law of descent in order to strengthen the rights of the child and the rights of the biological father.

16. Because of the demographic developments in Liechtenstein, the focus of policy in recent years has increasingly also been on older persons, and the Government defined the goals of its future old-age policy in 2007. According to these guidelines, the structures have been strengthened to support caretaking relatives and people in need of care at home.

17. In the area of disabilities, the Law on the Equality of Persons with Disabilities from the year 2007 constitutes the most important legal foundation. The purpose of this law is to eliminate or prevent discrimination of people with disabilities. The Government also elaborated a concept to improve the integration of people with disabilities in the labour process which is planned to be implemented as part of the administrative reform currently underway. The Parliament is expected to consider the Government's proposal in the first half of 2013.

18. The new law on the registered partnership of same-sex couples also entered into force on 1 September 2011. Registered couples are now treated virtually equally to married couples. This has made an important contribution to overcoming the discrimination and social taboos regarding homosexuality.

19. The Minister emphasized that Liechtenstein's commitment is not limited to domestic issues. Despite its small size and the limited resources of its diplomatic service, it also makes a contribution internationally. It is especially active in the fields of women's rights and children's rights. Liechtenstein has also achieved special visibility through its many years of extremely active and successful work on behalf of the International Criminal Court. Liechtenstein promotes universal ratification of the Rome Statute and of the amendments agreed in Kampala. Solidarity with countries that are less wealthy is another important component of its foreign policy. With an ODA share of 0.62% in 2010, Liechtenstein has nearly achieved the international target of 0.7%.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

20. During the interactive dialogue, 41 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

21. Chile noted the high level of protection of human rights, as well as the commitment of Liechtenstein to continue improving the promotion and protection of human rights through an active dialogue with the civil society. Chile valued legal and administrative changes being made by Liechtenstein for the strengthening of its institutional structures, in particular it referred to the creation of the Ombuds Office for Children and Young People, and the decision to establish the Office of Equal Opportunity in accordance with the Paris Principles. Chile made recommendations.

22. China welcomed the adoption of measures to protect the rights of children and persons with disabilities, and to guarantee the right to employment and health. China further welcomed Liechtenstein's efforts to combat racism. It noted that some women do not enjoy equal participation in political and economic life, and that elderly women, women with disabilities and migrant women suffer discrimination in education, employment and health. China made a recommendation.

23. Costa Rica noted that Liechtenstein was the first State that ratified the amendments to the Rome Statute on the crime of aggression. It congratulated Liechtenstein for their joint activities on human rights education and training held with the civil society in schools and with the police, as well as for the appointment of an Ombudsperson for Children and the Young People. Costa Rica made recommendations.

24. Cuba highlighted progress made in the area of equality and non-discrimination, administration of justice, participation in political life, right to education, work and health, as well as on the legal and structural framework for the protection of human rights. It also highlighted, inter alia, measures adopted to combat domestic violence, to promote the participation of women in public life, to promote equality of opportunities in the labour market. Cuba made a recommendation.

25. Ecuador noted progress in the area of equality of women, some economic, social and cultural rights, political rights, education, the rights of children and persons with disabilities. It was concerned about some practices of discrimination, racism, xenophobia and intolerance against persons of different ethnic and religious origins. Ecuador was also concerned about the persistent violence against women, in particular towards migrant women. Ecuador made recommendations.

26. France welcomed measures to improve the situation and rights of refugees, particularly the withdrawal of reservations to the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees. It asked about practical measures to combat violence against women, particularly domestic violence, and about efforts to establish a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. France drew attention to the lack of legislation prohibiting racial discrimination. France made recommendations.

27. Germany commended the efforts undertaken to achieve de facto equality between the genders and encouraged Liechtenstein to pursue these efforts and through the raising of awareness to dissolve the stereo typical roles. It noted Liechtenstein's decision to create an independent body in accordance with the Paris Principles and requested to know when this body will commence work and how the provision of adequate resources and the effectiveness of its mandate would be ensured. It noted the planned reform to the Office of Equal Opportunity and requested to know how its independence would be safeguarded, as well as its accessibility in the course of the reform. Germany also requested to know how far the process of ratification has advanced with regard to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its optional protocol.

28. Guatemala recognized progress made in recent years, in particular the ratification of the 1954 Convention Relating to the Status of Stateless Persons and the creation of the Ombuds Office for Children and Young People. It noted CEDAW's concerns about the de facto discrimination against some disadvantaged groups of women and CERD's concerns about the lack of protection of citizens of 'third countries' who are not sufficiently protected against racial discrimination. Guatemala made a recommendation.

29. Hungary noted the ratification of the amendments to the Rome Statute and the creation of the Ombudsman Office for Children and Young People. It also noted with satisfaction the several measures taken to combat racisms, including the creation of the Office against Right-Wing Extremism. Hungary asked for more information about the work of the above mentioned new institutions. It expressed concern that the constitutional principle of equality before the law applied only to citizens, whereas foreigners received protection through international treaties. Hungary made recommendations.

30. Indonesia welcomed the establishment of several institutions to promote human rights, It encouraged Liechtenstein to step up its efforts in establishing a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. It took note from the Addendum of the first cycle of the UPR that Liechtenstein was in the process of acceding to International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families. It expressed concern about the de facto discrimination faced by certain disadvantaged groups of women, as well as the lack of legislation prohibiting racial discrimination. Indonesia made recommendations.

31. Kyrgyzstan noted that the promotion and protection of human rights were priorities in Liechtenstein's domestic and foreign policy, as well as the progress achieved in the implementation of recommendations from the first UPR cycle. It commended the measures to strengthen the legal and institutional framework for protection against discrimination and racism. Kyrgyzstan made recommendations.

32. Libya noted significant progress in the promotion and protection of human rights. It welcomed the fact that Liechtenstein lifted its reservations to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. It also welcomed the efforts taken to address violence against women and to promote gender equality. Libya made recommendations.

33. Malaysia welcomed the measures taken by Liechtenstein to implement the recommendations of the 1st UPR. It noted progress in the areas of gender equality, children's rights, the elderly and persons with disabilities, and measures to combat and prevent racism. Nonetheless, challenges remained with respect to racism, intolerance and xenophobia. Although measures had been taken to integrate persons from different ethnic and religious groups, Malaysia noted that Muslims continued to face a number of obstacles to practising their religion. Malaysia made recommendations.

34. Mexico highlighted progress made by Liechtenstein since its first review and recognized in particular, the attention paid to the fight against racism and intolerance, as well as the promotion of efforts for the protection and strengthening of the rights of women and children. It also commended Liechtenstein's interest in favour of the protection of refugees and displaced persons. Mexico made recommendations.

35. Morocco noted preparations for the ratification of a range of human rights instruments, including CPED and OP-CRPD. The emphasis placed on the integration of foreigners and immigrants and strategies to integrate foreigners into a supportive environment of diversity and multilingualism were welcomed. It noted the various measures to combat racism through the establishment of a specialized unit to combat right-wing extremism and awareness-raising campaigns, among others. Morocco made a recommendation.

36. The Netherlands stated that, although the human rights situation in Liechtenstein was excellent, there were challenges, including gender discrimination. It took note of the integration of the Office for Equal Opportunity with the new Office for Social Affairs and Society and expressed the expectation that this institution will prioritise non-discrimination and gender equality. It stated that, in the employment sector, women held positions of lower responsibility than men. The Netherlands requested information on the impartiality of the judiciary. The Netherlands made recommendations.

37. Nicaragua applauded consultations with the civil society to address the human rights agenda. It further welcomed the ratification of new international human rights instruments and their incorporation in the normative framework, and the implementation of public policies to address recommendations made during its first review. Nicaragua highlighted efforts to increase the equality index of women, to protect children and for the integration of foreigners. Nicaragua made a recommendation.

38. Norway noted Liechtenstein's preparations for the ratification of important human rights conventions and its commitment to strengthen the rights of minorities, since the first cycle. It noted with encouragement Liechtenstein's goal to reach an Official Development Assistance of 0.7 per cent of its GNI. Norway requested to know how Liechtenstein addressed the underrepresentation of women in elected and appointed bodies and particular how it would secure the increase of parliamentary seats for women in the elections of February 2012. It noted that CERD and the Council of Europe had indicated that there was room for improvement in combating racism and ensuring the rights of minorities. Norway made recommendations.

39. The State of Palestine welcomed the efforts to implement the recommendations made during the 1st UPR. It commended Liechtenstein for numerous measures taken to promote gender equality. It observed the positive progress made in respect of discrimination against persons who were not citizens of Switzerland or the countries of the European Economic Area and encouraged Liechtenstein to ensure that foreigners were protected from racial discrimination, particularly with regard to residency status, freedom of movement, employment, education, health care and housing. The State of Palestine made recommendations.

40. Peru highlighted progress made by Liechtenstein since its first review, such as the ratification of the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, the 1954 Convention Relating to the Status of Stateless Persons and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Co-operation in Respect of Inter-country Adoption, as well as the creation of the Ombuds Office for Children and Young People. Peru made recommendations.

41. The Philippines commended the achievements of Liechtenstein in the field of social and economic rights. It noted with satisfaction the recent reforms that were introduced in the areas of gender equality, children's rights and vulnerable groups, including the elderly, persons with disabilities and foreign residents. It also noted efforts to combat racial discrimination and trafficking in persons. The Philippines made recommendations.

42. The Republic of Moldova noted that, despite progress, the realisation of de facto equality between men and women remained a challenge, and stated that strengthening the Office for Equal Opportunity should ensure that priority be given to women's rights, non-discrimination and gender equality. It stated that a properly resourced Ombudsman for children and young people would contribute to the protection of children's rights and the achievement of gender equality. It recognised Liechtenstein's commitment to combating human trafficking. It made recommendations.

43. Slovakia commended the commitment of Liechtenstein to follow-up the recommendations it received in the first UPR cycle. It took positive note of the signing of OP-CRC-IC and the appointment of the first Ombudsman for children. The regular financial and practical contributions of Liechtenstein to the work of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights were noted. Slovakia made recommendations.

44. Slovenia commended Liechtenstein for its regulation on the applicability of international agreements in the country; for the ratification of 1961 and 1954 Conventions on statelessness; for the ratification of both amendments to the Rome Statute; and for its contribution to development aid and to OHCHR. It requested to know whether Liechtenstein intended to ratify the European Social Charter. Slovenia made recommendations.

45. Spain commended Liechtenstein for their efforts, in particular for their recent decision to establish an independent national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. Spain asked Liechtenstein to provide additional information on the process for creation of such institution. Spain made recommendations.

46. Sri Lanka noted the considerable attention paid to issues including the rights of the child, gender equality and the integration of foreigners. Particularly noteworthy were the establishment of the Ombuds Office for Children and Young People in 2009 and the establishment of the Children and Youth Advisory Council. Efforts to prevent trafficking in persons, even though Liechtenstein had not experienced the problem on its territory, were commended. Sri Lanka made recommendations.

47. Switzerland welcomed efforts by Liechtenstein to uphold the rule of law and its contribution to the International Criminal Court. It expressed appreciation that the two recommendations it had made during the first UPR cycle on adopting legislation to establish a civil partnership for same-sex couples and introducing the automatic prosecution of domestic violence had been implemented. Switzerland commended Liechtenstein for its plans to consider the legal framework for the voluntary termination of pregnancy. Switzerland made a recommendation.

48. Liechtenstein thanked all the delegations who spoke for their valuable contributions. On the establishment of a national human rights institution as well as the administrative reform, which was also addressed by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in an advance question, the Minister gave a brief overview of the existing institutions with a mandate to promote human rights.

49. The Corrections Commission is tasked with monitoring the treatment of convicts and of prisoners on remand and at the same time serves as the national preventive mechanism (NPM) as set out in the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture. Likewise of note is the Office for the Equality of Persons with Disabilities, which has a broad mandate, including to prevent discrimination and marginalization for persons with disabilities in everyday life and to facilitate integration to the greatest possible extent. The Government's Office of Equal Opportunity also plays a special role and is active in the fields of gender equality, disability, social disadvantage and sexual orientation. This Office is part of the administration, but operates free of directives in certain fields of its activities. As to the question from Germany, the Minister assured that the administrative reform does not affect the independence and the activities of this Office.

50. The most important innovation at the institutional level in the last four years was the creation of an Ombuds Office for Children and Young People in 2009/2010. A similar body, namely the Senior Advisory Council, was created for the representation of the interests of older people in 2007.

51. In the framework of an overarching administrative reform, the Government has reconsidered the institutional architecture in the area of human rights protection and promotion and adopted a draft bill proposing to create an independent human rights body in accordance with the Paris Principles. However, questions were raised both concerning the added value of such an institution and the proposed design of the new body. The Government has then decided to postpone this part of the reform in order to be able to make a comprehensive examination of all the questions that were raised.

52. On gender equality and women's rights and the respective subthemes like political participation of women, violence against women, the gender pay gap, stereotypes, etc., the Minister reiterated that, within the national administration, the Office of Equal Opportunity deals with gender equality and other human rights and non-discrimination issues.

53. Equality of women and men in the workplace is an issue the Government attaches very high importance to. Over the past decades, the general trend has clearly been toward increasing employment of women and accordingly toward more similarities with the employment patterns of men. The Government is focusing its work on the promotion of the compatibility of family and work. For the future, day-care facilities for children shall be further increased.

54. To the question from Iceland on extending the paid parental leave to fathers, the Minister responded that mothers have 20 weeks paid maternal leave after birth (during this time, they receive 80% of their normal income). Additionally, both mothers and fathers of children under three years are entitled to four months unpaid leave. This unpaid parental leave has been increased from three to four months only recently.

55. On the use of temporary special measures in all areas where women are underrepresented, in particular for appointed political bodies and decision-making processes, the Government has decided already in 1997 that all appointed political bodies like Governments' commissions, working groups etc. should have equal representation of women and men and that at least one third of the members of each of these bodies shall be women.

56. Regarding the question on the women's rights from the Netherlands and other states, the Senior Advisor to the Office of the Equal Opportunity explained that, over the last few years, a set of measures has targeted the career guidance and vocational orientation of girls and young women and of boys and young men in order to inform girls and young women of the importance of a sound foundation of training and professional development, to broaden the scope of their career choices, to encourage both girls and boys to question traditional gender roles, and to raise the awareness of parents and teachers regarding equal opportunity in career choices.

57. On the wage gap between men and women, the Senior Advisor continued that it has declined from 19.5 per cent to 17.8 per cent since 2009. The gross monthly wage of women was 17.8 per cent lower than that of men in 2010. Since 2008, women's wages have risen while those of men have fallen. Wages are a particularly sensitive area in which various measures were taken in 2012, including the wage inequality survey in the National Public Administration. The most important findings of the survey are: 1) the analysis of the wage data in the National Public Administration does not provide a direct indication of gender discrimination; and 2) it appears that equality in the National Public Administration has nearly been achieved for younger employees.

58. On the situation of the foreign population, the competent Liechtenstein authorities are in the process of examining all the recommendations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which examined the report of Liechtenstein in August 2012. The coexistence of the domestic and foreign population has been largely peaceful. In principle, citizens of third countries have access to the same quality education, health services and housing, labour rights and processes to naturalisation. The special laws do not differentiate in this regard. Many individuals with non-Liechtenstein nationality have taken on high- and mid-level positions in the private sector but also within the national administration.

59. The Director of the Immigration and Passport Office furthermore explained the integration of foreigners and asylum procedures. Migration secures the prosperity of Liechtenstein through targeted immigration of qualified workers and promotes integration of these immigrants and grants protection to persecuted persons, according to the Geneva Refugee Convention. In 2012, 623 residence permits were granted to foreign citizens for the purpose of employment, residence without employment, and family reunification. 74 people requested asylum and 18 people were granted asylum. Today, there are around 20 asylum seekers, and 17 temporary admitted persons. Residence permits may also be granted to victims and witnesses of crimes for the purpose of criminal proceedings or due to a serious case of personal hardships.

60. All foreigners belonging to a State with which Liechtenstein does not have a bilateral treaty on entry and stay are referred to as "citizens of third countries". They include citizens of more than 60 -70 different countries. Among foreigners in the total population of Liechtenstein, these citizens of third countries make up only about 20 per cent of them, i.e. a total of 2,527 persons, making up 7% of the total population of Liechtenstein.

61. As to Muslims as religious group, they make up four per cent of the population of Liechtenstein. These are mainly Turkish people, organized into two groups. In order to alleviate their situation, a Working Group has been established. Their needs are mainly religious education, cemetery, and places to worship. There is already religious education for Muslims at primary level, which is given in German. Discussions are under way with regard to a central cemetery where Muslims could be buried according to their right. As to the places of worship, these two groups have such places, though they are not mosques.

62. On racism, the Minister indicated that, within the framework of follow-up work to the CERD 2012 Concluding Observations, the explicit prohibition of organizations promoting racial discrimination will also be examined.

63. On equality, the equality of all Liechtenstein citizens before the law is guaranteed by Article 31 paragraph 1 of the Constitution. According to article 31, paragraph 3, the rights of foreigners are determined by international treaties, including their non-discrimination clauses, and by reciprocity. There is no explicit provision in the national system of laws, which prohibits discrimination of foreigners. However, Liechtenstein is a member of various international human rights treaties such as the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). According to case law of the Constitutional Court, the ECHR has the same rank as the constitution in substantive terms. There is specific case law, where the constitutional court has confirmed this view and explicitly extends the equality before the law to foreigners.

64. On the right-wing extremism, the Head of the Criminal Investigation Department of the National Police, who is, at the same time, the Head of the Government's Violence Protection Commission and Head of the Round Table on the Prevention of Human Trafficking informed that the preventive efforts of the government throughout the last few years contributed to break social taboos on right-wing extremism fuelling racism and xenophobia. As a result, right-wing extremism and xenophobia attitudes are more frequently discussed in the national media and a critical debate on these issues take place. This development was also facilitated by the "no-tolerance" strategy of the criminal investigation and prosecution authorities.

65. Nevertheless, there is a group of about 35 individuals affiliated to right-wing ideology. According to the findings of the sociological study and its recommendations, the Government adopted an action plan against right-wing extremism, which includes a series of measures, ranging from an awareness raising campaign in the civil society to preventive measures like public events for various target groups, e.g. police officers, judges and youth workers etc. Victims of right-wing violence have a right to be supported by the Victims Protection Office.

66. Thailand commended Liechtenstein on the inclusion of human rights promotion and protection as a key priority in its domestic and foreign policy. It welcomed its proactive legal and institutional framework to promote children's rights and steps taken towards ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its optional protocol. It noted efforts to combat racism and racial discrimination and to support and assist victims of human trafficking. Thailand made recommendations.

67. Togo welcomed the ratification of international conventions and creation of various commissions to address gender equality and violence and the issue of integration. It encouraged Liechtenstein to establish a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. Togo noted efforts to improve the integration of immigrants and prevent racism and discrimination. It encouraged the enactment of a comprehensive law on discrimination. It welcomed measures to protect children, women, the elderly and persons with disabilities. Togo made a recommendation.

68. Tunisia noted the creation of an ombudsman's office for children and young people and plans to establish a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles. It also noted steps taken to combat racism in line with the recommendations of the first UPR cycle and the CERD. It welcomed the commitment of Liechtenstein to achieve the 0.7 per cent ODA target as soon as possible. Tunisia made recommendations.

69. Turkey encouraged efforts to combat intolerance and xenophobia and welcomed the adoption of the plan of measures against right-wing extremism. However, it referred to reported instances of xenophobia and intolerance against ethnic and religious groups and to concerns about an inadequate legal framework for the prevention of racial discrimination. Foreigners from "third countries" should receive information on the integration agreement in advance and protection against discrimination. Turkey made a recommendation.

70. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland noted steps to strengthen the legal and institutional framework to combat racism and discrimination and encouraged the enactment of anti-discrimination legislation. It also encouraged the continued promotion of gender equality. It requested to know about further measures to prohibit torture and inhuman treatment. It suggested that independent bodies be tasked with investigating allegations of excessive use of force and violent treatment during apprehension of persons. It made recommendations.

71. The United States of America commended the commitment to the rule of law, democracy, freedom of expression and religious freedom, Holocaust education programmes and public commemoration ceremonies, the humane treatment of asylum-seekers from Africa and the extension of the time limit given to asylum-seekers to request a hearing. It recognized the high representation of women in politics, but noted the persistent gender pay gap. It also noted the low representation of minority groups in the Government and Parliament. It made recommendations.

72. Uruguay highlighted progress, including in areas relating to recommendations initially not accepted by Liechtenstein. It noted the ratification of various international human rights conventions and commended Liechtenstein for being the first State that ratified the amendments to the Rome Statute on the crime of aggression. It further noted the creation of the Ombuds Office for Children and Young People, the entry into force of new legislation for the official registration of same-sex partnerships and Liechtenstein's cooperation for development. Uruguay made recommendations.

73. Viet Nam appreciated Liechtenstein's efforts in implementing the recommendations from the first UPR cycle and noted improvement in legislation, national institutions and infrastructure on human rights. It also noted the strong policy to combat racial discrimination, racism and right-wing extremism. It requested further details on how Liechtenstein had successfully maintained a comprehensive social security system despite current economic difficulties. It made recommendations.

74. Algeria was encouraged by the large number of measures taken to improve inter-religious and inter-cultural understanding, as well as on-going efforts to combat racism and xenophobia. It hoped that current relations between the State and religious communities would lead to greater protection of the rights of all communities, but especially minorities. The law should expressly prohibit racial discrimination and organizations from inciting racial hatred. It also encouraged Liechtenstein to ratify the International convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families. Algeria made recommendations.

75. Azerbaijan welcomed ratification of the two conventions relating to statelessness and legislative measures adopted to combat violence against children and women, promote gender equality and combat racism. It emphasized the importance of public awareness-raising initiatives in combating racism and asked whether the Government was considering enacting legislation to prohibit racial discrimination and organizations inciting racial hatred. Azerbaijan commended Liechtenstein on its excellent education system and educational opportunities. It made recommendations.

76. Belarus noted with satisfaction the establishment of the Ombudsman on children issues. It noted that despite the standing invitation to special procedure mandate holders, no country visits took place in the past. Belarus was concerned at reports of a lack of legislation prohibiting racial discrimination, excessive police force during detention and a lack of transparency during interrogations, and insufficient efforts to address discrimination against women, trafficking in women and gender equality. Belarus made recommendations.

77. Brazil noted steps to strengthen the legal and institutional framework to counter discrimination and racism and ensure the free movement of persons. However, it expressed concerns over gender equality and over the detention of asylum-seekers solely on grounds of illegal entry, as well as their lack of access to legal aid. It requested to know whether further actions would be taken to promote the rights of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) people. Brazil made recommendations.

78. Bulgaria commended Liechtenstein for its efforts to implement the recommendations of the 1st UPR cycle and to provide a high level of human rights protection. It particularly welcomed the creation of the Ombudsman Office for Children and Young People. Bulgaria made a recommendation.

79. Lesotho welcomed continuing efforts by Liechtenstein to protect the rights of special groups of people such as persons with disabilities, women and children. It commended Liechtenstein on the substantive progress made towards achieving gender equality, not least through the enactment of the Gender Equality Act. Lesotho made recommendations.

80. The delegation of Liechtenstein explained developments in ratification of various treaties. For the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the Government has appointed an inter-office working group to assess the need for preparation of its ratification. Its ratification is highly connected to the issue of the administrative reform. Once the administrative reform is complete, the plan is to continue its ratification with a high priority. As for the Convention on Enforced Disappearance, which Liechtenstein signed in 2007, the intention of the Government is to first adapt the criminal law, and then, to submit it to Parliament for approval.

81. For ILO conventions, their ratification requires a membership in ILO, however, Liechtenstein does not intend to join ILO in the near future. Liechtenstein attaches great importance to social and economic rights and is transposing all relevant EU legislation, including the high EU labour standards, into its domestic law, and many of these labour standards go beyond what ILO conventions are stipulating.

82. Liechtenstein considers the European Convention on Preventing and Combating Violence against Women and Domestic Violence an important landmark in fighting against gender-based violence. Due to the wide scope of this Convention, it will take some time to analyse if national legislation has to be amended or national processes have to be established.

83. As for the European Social Charter, its ratification would imply significant adjustments of the domestic laws. Against the background of pending ratifications of other important international treaties, there is, for the time being, no clearly fixed time table for its ratification.

84. Finally, examination of the International Convention on the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Family Members as well as its existing practice raised major concerns with regard to its legal application. This is why Liechtenstein has not ratified this Convention. As to reservations, since last UPR, Liechtenstein has withdrawn several reservations to international human rights treaties. For the near future, withdrawal of two reservations on family reunification is planned.

85. On the alignment of national legislation with all obligations under the Rome Statute, the Minister pointed out that Liechtenstein has ratified the amendments on the crime of aggression, together with the amendment on article 8 adopted at the review conference in Kampala. The Kampala amendments will be incorporated as separate provisions in the Liechtenstein Criminal Code, and the Liechtenstein law on the cooperation with ICC and other international courts will be amended accordingly.

86. On the impartiality of the judicial powers and the appointment of judges, the Minister underlined that the impartiality of the judiciary and the appointment of judges is fully guaranteed under the current system and are fundamental principles of the legal order in Liechtenstein.

87. With regard to persons with disabilities, it was emphasized that when the Law on the Equality of Persons with Disabilities was drafted and adopted in 2006, specific provisions concerning the protection against discrimination at the workplace were included.

88. As to the question from Cuba about ODA, the Minister informed that Liechtenstein has repeatedly underscored its commitment to achieving the international ODA target of 0.7 per cent as soon as possible.

89. On the question from Switzerland on abortion, the Minister informed that there has been an initiative of some Parliamentarians which commissions the Government of Liechtenstein to make a proposal as regards conflict situation of pregnant women.

90. On the issue of education, the delegation indicated that the office of education is aware of its important role in promoting human rights and tolerance and in combating any other form of racial discrimination. Major reforms and initiatives have been taking place within the past years, and there have been intensive political debates on educational matters. The Education Strategy was published in 2011, and together with the integration concept, it has a positive influence on the administrative level. By implementing a steering group on language issues and addressing the opportunities for learning languages of origin, Liechtenstein has been able to enforce and address the issues of migration and gender more on a higher policy level.

91. On human trafficking, the delegation stated that Liechtenstein is now facing relatively new phenomenon, which is organized beggar groups from Eastern European countries, often of Roma community origin. In a few cases, minors were involved. They could be victims of human trafficking for labour exploitation. Liechtenstein decided to learn more about victim-related projects in Austria and Switzerland and to evaluate potential cooperation. Contacts were also established with Romanian authorities present in Switzerland in this regard.

92. With regard to concerns raised by Belarus, the delegation indicated that Liechtenstein meets high standards for investigating and prosecuting alleged cases of police violence, and procedures are implemented to minimize the risk of police force in interrogation of detainees.

93. The Minister thanked all the delegations that participated in the UPR of Liechtenstein, indicating that their comments and recommendations will undoubtedly serve as valuable tools for development of its future human rights policies at home. She assured that, in the coming weeks, competent authorities, will examine their recommendations in detail in order to make proposals to the Government on how to follow up concretely its UPR. She also assured that Liechtenstein will continue to attach great importance to the promotion of human rights in the country.
